As mature as Photoshop Elements is (it must be nearly into its 20s as far as versions), Adobe keeps creating new features to incorporate. Often, Elements is given features before Adobe Photoshop and Adobe Photoshop Lightroom. Many of these new features are a result of Adobe Sensei Artificial Intelligence (AI) that allows otherwise complex manual tasks to be handled automatically.

Connected Experience - Photoshop is even smarter. If you install the new Photoshop mobile app and connect to your image on iPhone or iPad, you can view it on your phone – and much more. Use Live Crop to trim and crop on your phone, rotate an image you've uploaded to Behance and add a text layer. You can even access all of the new AI filters powered by Adobe Sensei – which turns your photos into works of art. Adobe Sensei AI enables content creators to add more to the online experience: with new selection improvements, a new Delete and Fill tool, and the ability to add text to images and videos that are ported to the web as simple HTML. And new automatic enhancements help images look more professional. Photoshop's latest feature, Content Aware Fill, no longer requires an image to be converted to black and white before using. Users simply load an image into Photoshop and can go into Fill with one click. Areas of the image are blended with the surrounding content, revealing hidden areas and making details look realistic. No longer do users have to manually turn on Black and White Mode to eliminate the distraction of the underlying colors. Now, Photoshop gets smarter to help make the most of images. Once it activates Black and White Mode, it turns the image into a high dynamic range (HDR) image. The algorithm then processes the image and eliminates the blurring caused by the transition from colors to grayscale. The result: cleaner, richer, more vibrant images.

Adobe's been working on a new tool and it's arrived in July: Adobe Illustrator CC 2018 for Design. Designed specifically for designers, it opens up new levels of creativity with new features including Typekit integration, 24-way panels, and the ability to frame and publish on social media. Adobe Photoshop CC for Design offers a bunch of new features too. Its key features include an easier way to adjust, fine-tune, and see where colors in pictures are coming from, innovative new layer masks, and lots more. To access the new software, head to Adobe help (Opens in a new window) . Possibly one of the most mind-blowing new features from Photoshop for the year ahead is the introduction of Neural Filters. It's actually a new workspace within Photoshop with filters powered by Adobe Sensei. Equipped with simple sliders, you can make magic happen such as changing your subject's expression, age, gaze or pose in the time it takes you to say "AI technology". To access Neural Filters head to Photoshop, and choose Filters > Neural Filters. The download is free, and you can get it from the adobe website here . If you already have Adobe Illustrator, the new 'for design' CS5 release allows you to continue using the app freely, but you will notice some UX changes and functionality revivals to match the new features included in the latest release.

More and more of the industry standard features that we take for granted are increasingly delivered through the internet: from the software used to work on the photographs, to the software used to make the photographs, to the websites that display the photographs. As this continues to evolve, there will be a shift in the techniques and tools used for making large-scale viable images. As such we are being forced to redefine and refocus what a photograph is. For example, giant, billboard sized photos are now feasible; we digitize and post them on the web where print size is now a commodity. What will happen to the printed photograph? Will there still be higher resolution prints? How about when digital cameras reach the resolution of our professional film cameras? How did we adapt and react to the shift in photographic process that the invention of the slide camera brought? Because of the availability of custom, online services, businesses are able to easily share and market their work with their customer base. Businesses are provided with very easy means for people to provide feedback, leave comments and suggestions of how they can use the product. This allows businesses to be more active with their customers and improve their products. Marketers are using the internet to target consumers. Advertising is moving online and for this reason businesses are moving online. Their products or services are up on web sites, so they can direct consumers directly to them. The internet is making traditional business models obsolete. More traditional business models are shifting online. In fact, many businesses are providing their content and selling it as product. …
