Q: How to set each object with its own texture I want to create a mountain, but, instead of having one single mountain texture, I want each part of the mountain to have its own texture (different stone, different grass, etc.) A: Totally depends how you want to achieve this, on what kind of "device" you want to achieve this. If you have heightmaps you should be able to use them to create your texture, however if you want to give every single block a different texture you might want to use the concept of a lightmap. In both cases you basically need to have maps representing the terrain and use them to create the textures for your blocks. There are many ways of going about it, the easiest in my eyes would be to make a 3D stack of arrays (loops) storing the data in a single flat single texture. There are many circumstances in the market place and in other environments in which two or more corresponding pairs of positionable members need to be manipulated to cause corresponding motion of one of the members relative to the other. Examples of such corresponding pairs of positionable members in which it is required to selectively manipulate the members include pairs of clamps used to secure a primary member and a secondary member together, and cable supports and the supporting cables used to secure the cable supports to an overhead beam. In the case of cable supports, for example, a plurality of cable supports are secured to an overhead beam or other supporting structure, and the cable supports are slotted to receive cables which are passed through the cable supports and secured thereto, typically by sliding the cables down through the cable supports into slotted portions thereof. An example of a cable support having a sliding member is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 5,084,912 issued Jan. 28, 1992 to Macdonald et al. A cable clamp of the type disclosed in that patent is suitable for securing a cable at an upper position, and comprises a top plate, a central pad, and a bottom plate. The top plate, bottom plate, and central pad are compressively arranged in an arcuate-like configuration with the plate edges being crimped to secure the plate to the cable. The pad has holes for receiving fastening screws. The slide member includes an upper cylindrical portion received within the central pad, an intermediate circular portion arranged between the top and bottom plates, and a lower cylindrical portion received within the lower
