We are applying molecular dynamic simulation methods to achieve such a goal by investigating and understanding the effects of solvent conditions on the simulation of proteins and nucleic acids. In the past, we have developed and explored two new methods for simulating single-stranded nucleic acids. These methods are based on the observation that denaturation of DNA or RNA involves thermal fluctuations of single-stranded regions so that the net conformation change can be mimicked by sampling conformations from a restricted region of conformational space. One of the methods involves simulation of biopolymers in the presence of strong electric fields. The other involves an extension of free energy perturbation calculations to a fixed-end stacking-style simulation. We will also examine the melting and denaturation of ribonuclease A (a small protein) and transfer RNA (a large RNA molecule). If our preliminary experiments are successful, we will apply these methods to the study of biopolymer melts, as well as nucleic acid and protein crystallography. Here are some of my favourites, both from their own collections and from trading partners. Analogue's huge Erato (7") collection is probably my favorite. Regardless of price, record bags or other cool stuff, I just can't get over the size of this one. Some other artists are also beginning to release 7" singles instead of CDs. I've included two artists that I like on this 7": Canadian electro outfit Arrogant Sons of Bitches and Canadian pop-punk band Arcade Fire. Pretty much the only place you can get DJ Shadow is on vinyl. Fortunately, the consistent customer service provided by Northside at their retail store in Seattle has helped me maintain a relationship with them and eventually landed me this pretty nice collection. Nothing too special, but I'm willing to trade with you if 3e33713323
