Gaming Wikia Staff Gameplay The gameplay in Nfs 19 returns to focusing on the challenges of rally races, which can be both solo and co-op, before incorporating open-world racing around a variety of cities such as Los Angeles, San Francisco, Chicago, Las Vegas, and New York City. The gameplay is more similar to Need for Speed: Hot Pursuit (2010) than its prequel, Need for Speed: Hot Pursuit 2 (2009). The game returns to the Need for Speed series' emphasis on carbon copy drift and on-track racing tactics, as well as the free-roaming format of earlier games, but it contains many improvements and alterations. The game features visual changes compared to Need for Speed: Hot Pursuit 2 (2009). Polyphony Digital credits these changes to more detailed environments and visual effects. The game includes over two hundred cars that players can drift around the city freely in races or collect to upgrade the customization options and performance. It also includes a range of driving techniques that allow players to exploit the physics of the game, either by slowing down or speeding up in traffic, setting air brakes, and drifting to control the direction of travel. The game also included new gameplay elements, such as player-made circuits, and additional drift-slalom courses. Multiplayer consists of the same basic mechanics as in the single-player mode, except that only one player can race at once. Players can purchase and earn upgrade parts from the time they enter the race, and the upgrades can be purchased at any point during the race. Multiplayer will be made available in post-launch downloadable content. The game features a new replay system, which allows players to enjoy videos of their best stunts and races. Synopsis

The game's opening sequence begins with Rash, Tyler, and Kenji on the run following the events of Need for Speed: The Run (2013). Although the team has successfully escaped from prison, they lose a gang fight and find themselves caught on the border of the US. When Rash notices there is a checkpoint in the nearby city, he convinces the rest of the team to drive across into LA, being the most populated city in the United States, to steal cars for the road ahead of them. The team is spotted by law enforcement, who set up roadblocks in front of them. A chase begins, and Rash convinces Tyler and Kenji to leave him behind with the cars. Kenji takes Tyler to a dealership in the city
