Adjusting color Photoshop enables you to make a large number of adjustments to images, primarily by adjusting color. You can also use adjustments to adjust image brightness, contrast, and exposure. Figure 5-1 shows a diagram of the four types of color adjustments available. You can find them under the Edit⇒Adjustments menu. Photoshop's Adjustments panel offers the following four types of color adjustments: *

Brightness/Contrast: This option enables you to make minor adjustments to overall image brightness and contrast. * Color Balance: This option enables you to adjust a color's tint — yellow, green, and blue in the case of a color wheel. * Levels: This option enables you to make adjustments that affect the overall image's brightness and contrast. * Hue/Saturation: This option enables you to make changes to the color spectrum of an image — essentially manipulating the appearance of the colors and changing them to shades of green, red, blue, or whatever you want.

Let X be a subset of

Q: Merge list of lists by group and column into a dataframe without a conditional/repeat statement I

This is as close as I can get it but I have a conditional for every group that has more than 1 element but this is not a good way to write this. How can I merge this list into a dataframe with the group column being the row index and the values being the lists without the conditional? test = [['A', '', ['12', '', '']], ['A', '', ['11', '', '']], ['A', '',
