The Indian Space Research Organisation (ISRO) has designed an unmanned vehicle that is capable of delivering satellites into orbit. But as the commercial industry seeks approval for its own miniature space craft for delivering small satellites to orbit, and as NASA explores placing humans on the moon within a decade, researchers around the world are busy working on small satellites that would help boost mankind's exploration space missions. The real space race may be between these two entities in the coming years. Japan Aerospace Exploration Agency (JAXA) is planning to launch its second X-ray astronomy satellite to explore the cosmos while Europe is about to launch its fourth robot explorer. The ISRO is also planning to put up a model of its own small 'rover' to explore the surface of Mars in 2017. The ISRO will carry out a demonstration orbit of 5 kg (11 pounds) micro-satellite, called Small Satellite Orbital Deployer (SSOD), in 2017. ISRO chairman K. 82138339de
