Q: Python remove unwanted characters from user input file I have a python program that will allow me to take three items of data and write them to a file. To do this I run: `f_file = open('output.txt', 'w')` and then I have some code which looks like this: `for item1, item2, item3 in zip(data1, data2, data3): f_file.write(item1 + " " + item2 + " " + item3) f_file.close()` This will output to a file like this: 004 3,1 007 3,1 What I want to do next is take the data from the file and output it to another file like this: 004 3,1 My issue is that the data I'm taking from the file contains unwanted characters. The first character is a number 4 and then after that there is a space and then a number which indicate that the number of characters in that line varies. And they might look like this: 007 3,1 I'm not sure if I can do this but I'm assuming it must be possible. A: You can use `f_file = open('output.txt', 'w')` for line in lines: `line = line.strip() # Remove leading and trailing spaces f_file.write(line) f_file.close()` and then read the file in to do your comparisons. What's New In Adobe Photoshop Cs3 Plugins Free Download?

The present invention relates to an article of footwear and more specifically to an article of footwear with a plurality of pieces of insulation for use in the warmth of a wearer. At least one type of insulating material is commonly used to give comfort to a wearer. For example, a sock may be provided with an inner liner, which provides comfort and warmth to a wearer, and an outer shell, which provides a barrier to heat loss. The outer shell may be a type of cloth material, such as cotton, or a sock may be provided with a type of plastic material. For example, U.S. Pat. Nos. 5,006,121 and 5,067,644 to Ewen et al., and U.S. Pat. No. 4,141,176 to Lohman disclose articles of footwear with socks, which include a liner, an outer shell and a mid-sole material. The type of material selected for the liner or outer shell will typically be chosen based on the intended use of the sock. For example, if the sock is intended for use in cold weather, then a type of material, such as polypropylene, may be used. If the sock is intended for use in hot weather, then a type of material, such as cotton, may be selected. To date, however, the material used for the liner and/or outer shell has been the same as the mid-sole material, although this may not be true for all types of footwear. For example, U.S. Pat. No. 4,141,176 to Lohman discloses articles of footwear with a sock having a mid-sole material, outer shell, and liner. As another example, U.S. Pat. No. 4,369,640 to Wilcox et al. discloses an article of footwear with a sock with a mid-sole material, outer shell, and a liner. In each of the previous references, a conventional mid-sole material is used for the sock. Although such conventional articles of footwear, as described above, work quite well for providing comfort and warmth to a wearer, various disadvantages may be associated with their manufacture. For example, the midsoles of such articles of footwear may be made of the same material that forms the exterior of the sock, such as polypropylene, cotton, etc. However, there are certain disadvantages to this manufacturing process. Such disadvantages include the potential that the material used for the mid-sole of the sock may be outgassed
