Dogs are playing a bigger part in the lives of millions of people across the UK. In fact, in May 2014, over 68 million (4.5%) of the UK population had a dog and a similar number had a cat. This accounts for 32.3 million (2.3%) of all households. Dogs and cats are less costly to keep and much less likely to cause health problems than each other, so are not necessarily an entirely appropriate choice for your home, but if you are able to get on with both of them, you might be faced with a dilemma over where best to keep your pet. Dogs and cats have a symbiotic relationship with their owners, humans but their independence can lead them to act up when not getting enough attention from their human companion. Advantages of owning a cat One of the most important attributes of a cat is its closeness. A pet cat is like an old friend who will sit by its human companion and keep them company as they work or just relax. Pets like cats have a wide range of excellent characteristics that will make life enjoyable for you. For example, cats are affectionate, social animals and will keep themselves occupied whether they are alone or with a person. Cats sleep very little, in fact they can be very efficient as they will stay awake to feed, cleaning and ensuring they have a warm environment to live in. Cats are great friends as they will lend a helping hand e24f408de9
