German Famed Weisse is a german sour brew. I personally love the taste of Weisse because it is very refreshing and does not give me a headache like a lot of other beers. I like to drink Weisse while working out. It helps boost your morale. Weisse is usually made from tart and unmalted wheat grains. Unmalted grains allow the wheat to ferment quickly. Before I used Weisse to lose weight, I drank Weisse often as a hangover remedy.Q: Winforms DataTable with a large number of columns We have a requirement to display a datatable in an ASP.NET app. The table has about 500 columns, and the idea is to use a DataGridView control to browse through the columns, and select some of them to be included in a DataTable. The DataTable will then be displayed in a DataGridView. This is working OK. But as the table gets larger and larger, we start to run into issues. The DataTable becomes too big for the window to display. The display control becomes very sluggish. The WPF control DataGrid is a good fit for this kind of scenario. But there is a good chance that we will be required to make this winform app available for both WPF and winforms customers. Does anyone have any experience with such a scenario, with large tables? Is there a good work around, or other approach to this kind of task? Maybe a better DataTable implementation for ASP.NET? A: You can go full blown with DataGridView and set the CanUserDeleteRows="False" to tell it how large your table is. With that, you'd have to add and remove records and rows, and it'd be quite a bit slower than using the standard DataTable. If you're willing to go the other way, and use a more traditional DataTable implementation, you'll be able to use the DataGridView automatically and have it handle the scroll and resize for you, as well as every other element of the DataGridView. So, I'd recommend setting the CanUserDeleteRows="False" and implementing a View of the DataTable that just deals with the rows you want to show. Q: LDAP: Visibility vs Read vs All LDAP Operations? I'm new to LDAP administration, and I'm trying to understand the difference between visibility and
