Tip You can save actions to the History palette. If you find an action you would like to use again in the future, it is great practice to save it as a reusable action. If you drag a layer onto the History palette (as seen in Figure 3-2'), you can see the history of the layer's actions. This is great for when you

Q: In Swift, how do you add non-simd functions to a Swift class at runtime using libdispatch? I'm trying to make a class extension in Swift that is able to call non-simd functions dynamically. Currently I'm experimenting with the `dispatch_apply` function, but I can't get it to work on a class extension, only on a standalone function. The code is pretty straight forward; I have a protocol: `protocol MyProtocol { func myfunction() }` and I am trying to add this to a class extension `extension MyClass : MyProtocol { func myfunction() { #if simd DispatchQueue.main.async { // do simd stuff } #else // call a non-simd function #endif } }` If I move this to a standalone function and it does not work. However, if I add the `_addDispatchInstance()` method in the class extension, it works. What do I need to change in the class extension if I want to call non-simd functions? I tried to add the `dispatch_apply` function as well, but I failed to get the right memory layout for it, so that was impossible. A: I was able to get it to work by moving the class extension into a separate module, and adding the necessary `_addDispatchInstance()` function. Now it seems to work just fine. It's unclear though, why the standard module produces an error, but the extension module does not. Harold T. Dobbs House The Harold T. Q: Why does Vim assume V in Visual Line Mode is a window? I was writing a rather long Vimscript, and was in the middle of "tabular" making (using `:help`) the cursor to move vertically. It occurred to me that I needed to add a moving cursor too, so I used `:set cursor=a`. The problem was that Vim assumed this was a window and, as it was the default mode, would move the cursor to the first line of the window. I couldn't work out why until I started moving the cursor around, and realised that it was definitely not a window: V
