Productions Flying Angel Productions is an American animation studio and subsidiary of Legendary Entertainment. Flying Angel was founded by Mel Blanc and Marc Schlenoff in 1985. The studio is located in Burbank, California. In 1975, soon after Griffin died in a drug-related shooting, Schlenoff returned to recording albums again, this time using voices provided by another actor friend, Jim Backus. The success of Jim Backus albums led to the formation of the studio Flying Angel Productions, with Schlenoff playing a more prominent role in his business ventures. He moved to California and set up a small recording studio, originally in a rented warehouse. Backus would record an album there during the day with musicians and then play at night in local clubs and theaters. "It started to take off and some other artists got involved, and others wanted a place where they could do their own material." Flying Angel remained a modest success and by 1982 Schleno
