BEIJING (Reuters) - China offered Pakistan a $20 billion, 60-year concession on gas supplies, saying it had brought its own customers under control, state news agency Xinhua reported on Sunday. China's Prime Minister Li Keqiang gave a special one-day briefing to Pakistani politicians, according to the report, as China's relations with President Barack Obama's administration become strained over a strategic waterway dispute and U.S. sanctions on China over cyber attacks. Pakistan, which is already Asia's No. 2 supplier of natural gas, a rarity among its largely impoverished, landlocked neighbours, was among the countries ordered by Obama in June to reduce military aid and cancel projects funded with U.S. aid funds. Pakistan is a key ally of the United States in the war on Islamist militants in neighbouring Afghanistan. China, Asia's biggest supplier of natural gas, announced last month it would cut domestic supplies to Pakistan from April, accusing it of reneging on deals and disrupting supply networks. Pakistan denies the accusations. On Sunday, Xinhua did not say why it was switching on the offer on Monday or when it would enter into force. But it said China had improved its "domestic control" over gas supplies, and that the offer was the longest one on record between the countries. Xinhua said the offer would impose no import duties or buybacks on gas and that it offered "big picture thinking" and a long-term, secure future. On Saturday, Chinese Premier Li Keqiang arrived in Islamabad for meetings with Pakistani Prime Minister Nawaz Sharif. Last Wednesday, U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry arrived in Islamabad for talks on a deal to have Pakistan reopen a U.S. supply route to Afghanistan that is important for the flow of supplies of economic aid. China, which is building the "western route" across Pakistan to bring natural gas to markets in Europe, wants a quick resolution to the dispute over the $4.5 billion, 1400 km-long, pipeline project. Washington fears it is a route the Islamist militants who have been fighting NATO forces in Afghanistan could use to infiltrate
