So you want to go to Warrington. You want an adventure but you want the experience that it can only get with Rifles and Curry. If you are in the UK, feel free to come along during the week leading up to May Bank Holiday. As normal, we will be run on a membership basis. We have a set of three hikes that people can join for a fixed fee. We ask that people who will be joining us are aware of the following: 1) We do have a maximum group size of eight. 2) The hike becomes a long, tiring, and expensive weekend adventure. 3) Bring all your kit and gear. 4) We always like to eat! Whilst we will be eating a huge variety of foods at each venue, we do have a few standards that we would like to stick to. We will not tolerate foods the following: 1) Anything which is the complete opposite of the two listed above. 2) The sound of people putting up and removing a tent. 3) Anything that causes a blow out.

4) Loud music So if you like the sound of it then you can come and join us. You can sign up as a member on the website. If you have any questions, then please feel free to contact us! Facebook: Twitter: Instagram: SnapChat: Get tickets to BaseCamp Manchester! RSVP:

Opengloves is a Video game by Danwillm for the Oculus Rift. The game is a collection of several VR puzzles mixed with traditional video game mechanics that will leave you with a less heavy feeling for your Hands. All available VR devices that Oculus Rift offers right now are supported by this software (Managed by 'unlimited hardware' which isn't an issue for us developers as long as hardware is supported). Changes to Original Game -slight cosmetic changes for rooms/windows to make it less cheap-ish -no longer recommended to use Oculus software as it's not supported by Opengloves (it's another free tool you can use) -support for mixed FOV environments -support for more controllers (1,2,3 and 4) -support for multiple external communication devices -support for custom distance/duration collisions (to allow more options) -support for new values for sensing object/collision -shouldn't be hard to create plugins for all these new features -support for more devices (4S Samsung Gear, PSVR, HTC Vive, Oculus Touch) -more rooms & windows to place objects -more UI elements to place objects -tons of new objects to place in various rooms about this download: OpenGloves is a VR Driver by Danwillm for the Oculus Rift. In VR gloves mode your hands are tracked and used to place objects in a virtual environment. The driver has different options to setup your VR device and make it play a specific game. Your hands are tracked by a built-in in-house tracking software. The software supports Mixed FOV VR devices Slightly more technical options and settings are available in the settings menu. Oculus room mode and fullscreen are used to configure the setting for fullscreen or room mode. Supported input devices are: Configure your Oculus Rift using the menus, click on the settings button and confirm that "vive" is selected. If your Oculus system comes with an external touchpad, setup the touchpad mapping to the following settings: Configure your external to play?- There are 9 different elements to collect. Each element has a minimum of 3 and maximum of 5 squares. You may start collecting an element when it is shown in the game board. The squares with an element are marked with a green dot. As soon as you collect an element, your score multiplier increases by one. (You can only collect a maximum of 3 elements per level). There are bonuses for collecting more than one element. The elements are collected like a match-three game. The color scheme for the tiles is Blue squares, Green dots, Purple squares, Red squares, Yellow dots, Turquoise squares, Orange dots, Lemon squares, Orange dots, Purple squares, Red squares, Violet squares, Blue squares, Green dots, Magenta squares, Black squares, Orange squares, White squares, Blue squares, Lavender squares, Lime squares, Lime squares, Blue squares, Green dots,

Red squares, Pink squares, Purple squares, Red squares, Black squares, Magenta squares, Orange squares, Yellow dots. You collect elements until you have collected all three elements in that element. Every time you collect an element, your multiplier increases by one. When you have collected all three elements of that element, your multiplier decreases back to 1. You will not be able to collect an element until you have collected the corresponding element on the board. (You don't need to start collecting element 1 until you have collected all the element 1s on the board). You can only start collecting the element that is on the bottom row on the board. You don't need to collect elements up the board, and you don't need to collect elements down the board either. If there are some elements left to collect on the board, you can start collecting them up the board. If there are elements left to collect down the board, you can start collecting them down the board. There is no limit on collecting the elements on top of the board. You can start collecting the elements down the board as well as collecting them up the board. You can't collect elements on the bottom row of the board. There is no limit on collecting elements in the rows above the row that has the element in it. You can only collect elements that are on the screen. If there is some other element in the top row that you don't have

lass Living glass is a hard, opaque, semi-translucent form of igneous rock, the main component of which is silica, commonly known as rock or quartz. A thin film of molten material commonly known as a "skin" covers the rock particles, usually either an iron-bearing silicate (quartz and feldspar for example) or a silica-bearing silicate. The chemical composition of the skin varies widely across species, with cracks and fissures allowing variations in quartz, mica, and iron-bearing minerals. Living glass is a formation type of igneous rocks, meaning that they appear to be alive from the outside, that is, the skin has a characteristic mottled, fractured, or speckled appearance; the "living" appearance. In most living glass exposures, small volumes of moisture, concentrated geothermal heat, and a cold climate with high ultraviolet radiation, speed the destruction of the surrounding rock; leaving only a thin film of mineral glass on the surface. Most living glasses formed in a desert or arid area are associated with the subduction of the Indo-Australian Plate, and rarely develop since about 30 million years ago, when the Eurasian Plate and Indian Plate, which together form the former Earth's supercontinent Gondwana, began to split, allowing the Indian Plate to move northwards. Minerals lose colour as their crystal lattices soften during dehydration. Red-coloured mineral changes to glassy blue-green and eventually white. Most minerals in quartz, and silica, can act as nucleating agents for one another. The smaller particles of mother and daughter minerals remain intermixed in the gel and control the crystal habit, with the converse for larger sized particles. This allows a range of crystal growth patterns, with crystal sizes ranging from platelets to needle-like. In the case of quartz, two large, competing crystal growth patterns exist, either besserite - composed of platy apatite - and kyanite or wollastonite and fluorite. These are also the major constituents of feldspar, depending on the moisture content. In living glasses, the preferred crystal habit (besserite, or platy platy apatite) is controlled by the molten silicate existing during the initial stage of mineralisation. Geology Bounded by three distinct boundaries, living glasses can be considered to have a relatively thin crust of thin layer of mineral glass (0).
