The main goal of "HyperMotion" is to offer a more realistic experience for players and fans. The motion-capture suits provide players' physiological data, including peak sprint speed, contact area and muscle force as a visualization tool. Players can actually feel their on-pitch actions and can see how much effort is being put in during a match. Goalkeepers can now use the front view to sense whether or not the ball is at the back of the net and can visually confirm saves. New goalkeeper camera: Riese can now observe balls and shots on goal from their preferred angle. Using a breakthrough development in camera technology, players can now visualize shots, throws, crosses and all phases of a shot in first-person view. The goalkeeper camera can be manually shifted, has a high-resolution display and can be tilted up and down. Player read and react: The introduction of "Player Read & React" enhances player decision-making by providing new reactive feedback during gameplay. During gameplay, the HUD (heads up display) will now show the game's stats and provide more cues to what's happening on the pitch. For example, if a player attempts a long pass, the HUD will immediately show that the receiver is in position to receive the ball. If a player receives the ball in his own half, the HUD will now show the player's attackers closing in on him. The shot meter also provides a visual cue to how much power is behind the shot, and visualizes the ball's distance from goal. Increased ball physics: FIFA 22 improves ball physics to create a more realistic experience. The upgraded setup will allow for higher resolution and more accurate modeling of the ball. The new ball physics technology will also improve player anticipation of a ball, and will influence player movement and agility. This new system will reduce the number of player collisions by making players more aware of their surroundings. Players will also receive the ball quicker, particularly from counter-attacks. Ball passing - new "heading" mode: Players now have the ability to "pull out the ball" by making the correct heading motion when close to the ball. The pull out mechanic is enabled automatically when the player gets close to the ball, and can be accessed with a new contextual key: when you press the "H" key to perform a heading movement, you will pull the ball out. The new "Heating Up" mode

FIFA is a franchise of association football video games developed by EA Canada, published by Electronic Arts, and distributed worldwide by Electronic Arts. How does this rating work? This rating represents the expected level of difficulty for a player of average ability, including the time of day, day of the week, season and weather. The rating is based on difficulty levels in the Matchmaker. For example, an early-season weekday night in Northern Europe in December is slightly more difficult than a mid-week weekday day in May in Southern Europe in June. The ratings for each mode are averaged to produce the overall rating. For this rating, we use the default mode for a given difficulty level and weather.
