“By emulating the real-life movement of athletes, we can give players the freedom to be more expressive, to move in the game in a more instinctive and nuanced way,” said Adam Bhatti, Executive Producer at EA Canada. “With HyperMotion we can ensure that every motion that they do is natural, it’s right for them, and they have a fluidity to their on-ball movement and body control that is only possible in the real world.” “This includes precise stopping abilities, as well as shifts in weight, the ability to perfectly balance in one place, and on-the-ball vision,” Bhatti continued. “Along with this, we have added a number of new animations, with players now being able to perform such things as turning from side to side, making little chest passes, and having more elaborate feints, like the desired 'pretend pass' in the Pro Evolution Soccer series.” “We’ve also taken motion capture technology from our FIFA 20 team to the FIFA 22 team,” said Henrik Hansen, FIFA Technical Director, “This allows us to accurately capture the individual movements of the players, and to fill in some gameplay gaps to improve player interaction, and to make the on-ball movement of players more fluent. “Putting it all together creates something new in the world of football gameplay: the player controls that are as natural, expressive, and polished as possible,” Bhatti concluded. New Street Fighter V Crossover Character added The 'Street Fighter V: Burning Fight' crossover was first revealed on April Fools' Day, and now we know the legendary Street Fighter V character Ultra Guy's role within the crossover. Ultra Guy will be appearing as a playable character in EA Sports' new FIFA 22 game on Xbox One, PS4 and PC (March 1, 2019). There will be a series of challenges throughout the game, allowing you to take him on and beat him in Street Fighter V. Yoshinobu Tokunaga, Head of EA Sports said, "We were inspired by our own long-term community activity, the rise of eSports and how more and more consumers are now being exposed to this lifestyle.... We hope that by having as many as 100 athletes in game, we can bring the world of FIFA to as many consumers as possible."
