“FIFA 22 delivers the feeling of the real world. The on-the-pitch motion in FIFA 17 is great,” said David Rutter, FIFA Lead Gameplay Designer. “But this year, we worked with motion capture data from a whole host of real players to take the feel of the game to the next level. It’s a great addition to the game, and one that we’re really excited to share.” More players have undergone motion capture analysis to create FMV (FIFA ‘Machine-generated Video) for FIFA 22. These players are recorded with professional motion capture rigs from the NFL, NBA, MLB and other sports leagues, to give players a fully-fleshed out representation of some of the world’s best athletes. These content creators have contributed more than 700 hours of motion capture data, which is the biggest ever contribution to FIFA development. This data was then used to create FMV content for many different activities on the pitch – goalkeepers, strikers and defenders alike. “FIFA has always been great at giving players that authentic, in-game look and feel,” said Simon Wilbraham, lead gameplay producer. “But we have seen a marked rise in the use of FMV, so FIFA 22 is a milestone in our journey towards making the most realistic game in the FIFA franchise.” “Matching the gameplay to the emotional content is vital,” said Lucas Conon, director of sports marketing at EA. “An athlete’s emotions are often at its highest during a match, and they are the key to creating a truly immersive experience. We heard the feedback loud and clear, and we made sure that each and every video is as real as possible.” Players can influence the presentation and style of FMV. In addition to pre-defined settings for play and player identity (that can be manually tweaked), many aspects of the game’s FMV can be set on a per-player basis. For instance, you can take control over the lighting, camera angle and post-processing effects to create personalised, in-game looks. “We wanted to make sure that when you looked back at a scene, you really felt that you were in the game,” said Wilbraham. “In previous FUT games, there was a technical line between FMV and normal gameplay. But now, I
