It basically walks you through on how to setup different install options. The package comes with configurable document panels, background image support, canvas rotation, font support, etc. You can download and trial it here: Feel free to visit the support section on their website: or ask for support in the direct message on YouTube's star page: Every time the company Autodesk wants to sell its products, it has been putting its competitors behind the obstacle. Last year it got serious and announced the acquisition of the company Pix4D for more than $300 million. The situation becomes more serious when the reason for the purchase is not so clear. It seems that Autodesk wants to be ready for the market, the upcoming 3D printing revolution, already during this year. Pix4D specialized in the technical support for the 3D printers and supports the creation of new solutions and apps for them. However, the acquisition of the developer company is not free. The terms of the sale state that Autodesk, in return for the payment of the $105 million, will receive shares for $17, and for the remaining part will receive — nothing! ### What's New in the PixVis ScreenScope?

It is completely free for download, and you can find it at the link below. Q: Unable to use valueOf method in Groovy due to casting for H2 data source I've added Groovy 2.7 and Groovy JDBC 4.0.4 to my Grails project. The Groovy JDBC plugin uses JDBC 4.0 for JDBC 4.0 data sources and JDBC 2.0 for JDBC 2.0 data sources, but the default JDBC4DataSourceFactory does not support H2 as a JDBC 3.0 database. Hence I've used the following to get a JDBC 3.0 database working with my GroovyJDBC data source. jdbcDriverClassName = "org.h2.Driver" jdbcUrl = "jdbc:h2:mem:testDB;MODE=MYSQL;DB_CLOSE_DELAY=-1" jdbcUsername = "username" jdbcPassword = "password" However when I try to execute a SQL statement the columns return null despite the value being retrieved from an H2 database. def result = db.returning(sql.valueOf('values.fname')) When I do this with JDBC 4.0 I get the expected results. def result = new java.sql.ResultSet() def stmt = dataSource.getConnection().prepareStatement(sql.valueOf('values.fname')) stmt.setString(1, "Joe") stmt.setString(2, "Bloggs") stmt.execute() result.next() assert result.fname == "Joe" I've tried using various versions of JDBC drivers but to no avail. Any ideas? Edit: Added a bounty as this is not an issue that gets fixed easily. A: Based on the comments below I'm not 100% sure what the actual cause is, but here's the workaround I used and I think was in the correct direction. For anyone interested, I ended up using Groovy JDBC to issue the SQL statement and map the values to an object. This I used by overriding the execute() method, which maps to the SQL statement. I then mapped the
