Diego Rivera, an American artist from New Mexico, first exhibited his first mural at the California Mural Exhibition of 1911. Rivera created over a dozen of large-scale murals, depicting historical, political and social themes during his career, including The Allegory of the Election of 1884. Rivera was an advocate of union and public education for poor people, and a follower of philosopher and revolutionary leader, José Martí. In 1917, Diego Rivera and his wife Frida Kahlo travelled to the United States for an eight-month tour, which culminated in a showing of 16 large-scale murals at the first New Mexico State Fair at Albuquerque. The paintings, which took him five years to create, depicted the history of New Mexico. Diego Rivera travelled to the United States in 1917 to promote his work and the Mexican Revolution. His travels led him to California, New Mexico, Texas, and Mexico itself. His work received critical acclaim and acclaim in the United States, Mexico, Europe, and elsewhere. He painted murals in the United States, but most of his work resides in Mexico. Many of his paintings were stolen and taken to the United States during the 1910-1920 period, when the National Association of Mural Painters helped facilitate their distribution. His work has been exhibited in the United States, Canada, Mexico, France, Germany, the United Kingdom, and elsewhere. He is especially renowned for his murals depicting political, social, and historical themes including The United Fruit Company (1924). The mural was commissioned by the U. The United Fruit Company commissioned Rivera to portray its owner, George Creel. Although the New Deal commissioned many of his works, little of his original artwork remains in the United States. He explained, In the series The Mexican Revolution, I attempted to depict one side of the Revolution, but also to reveal the social and class causes which directly affected it. For over a year, I attempted to show its effects on the masses, of which only a small portion actually knew. I painted a history of the country from a Mexican perspective. The work gave a glimpse into the social, political, religious, and economic problems of the time. Rivera was a member of the communist-organized American Artists' Congress, and also the National Union of Grafters and Painters. In 1927, Diego Rivera moved his family to Mexico. This was because Rivera was a Communist sympathizer, and the Mexican government of President Plutarco Elías Calles considered him a

(1) Field of the Invention
The present invention generally relates to a control method for a torque converter. More specifically, the present invention relates to a control method that limits a motor current supplied to a drive motor of an automobile. (2)

Background Information Conventionally, control units such as those which control a motor torque of a drive motor that converts engine torque into an output torque have been proposed. In such control units, a torque converter is provided, and a driving mode of the torque converter is switched among a lock mode, a low speed (LP) mode, a medium speed (ML) mode, and a high speed (HP) mode (refer to Japanese Laid-Open Patent Publication No. 2002-354519, for example). In this control unit, a slip frequency of the torque converter is calculated based on a feedback control. Specifically, a slip frequency is calculated by adding a difference between a current velocity of the drive motor and a target current velocity to a target slip frequency. Based on this calculated slip frequency, control is performed to control the torque converter. Japanese Laid-Open

Patent Publication No. 2002-354519 describes a technique for controlling the torque converter using this type of control unit. In the control unit in Japanese Laid-Open Patent Publication No. 2002-3545
