SimCity 4 uses the world's finest game technology on your Mac, PC or Linux PC.So a while back, I was in my office and asked if I could use a software, though I'm not a software developer. I installed it, and now, I can use it. But I have a problem. I have a docked WPF window. In that Window there are two buttons, two labels, and a DataGrid. The window is docked at the bottom, with a Top (system menu). So I'm using the usual UP+Down method to switch between the window and my application. The problem is, when I click on one of my three buttons, it doesn't work. I can't get back to the Window. It shows an error that no window is associated with the thread, though there is. Do you have an idea? Maybe the window is not docked in a top window? (It's working fine on one of my machine though). Thnx in advance! Maybe you're not the only one having the same problem. Edit I've got it working now... So the problem was that my window was working with an old version of the program. That's why it was crashing. I've update it to the latest version... PS : Sorry for my english, I'm not native speaker. I don't think that the window is actually docked in the topmost one. I opened the topmost window's menu, and the first options are : up,
