QUIEN????? The Toronto Sun on Thursday, March 19, 2016 reports that sources to the Toronto Sun, who were briefed on the investigation, have confirmed that no Ontario police agency has been called in to assist. The Toronto Sun also reports that In 2008, contrary to the RCMP's assertion at the time, Boyle did not receive a demerit in his driving record for fleeing police, which would have prevented him from buying a gun. This fact contradicts the RCMP's assumption that Boyle was somehow denied access to a gun based on his demerit in his driving record. The Toronto Sun runs a full page ad announcing the press conference, featuring an interview with senior editor Michael Cooke. The paper also interviews University of Toronto black studies professor Jack Granatstein about Belke. The Toronto Star on Thursday, March 19, 2016 front page carries an exclusive interview, with retired OCRC deputy chief commissioner Warren Winkler. Winkler admits the police seconded to the RCMP's investigation, broke the law, but says in doing so, did not set a bad precedent. "It's an historic day," Winkler says. According to OCRC deputy chief commissioner Warren Winkler, the police acting on behalf of the RCMP: did not have legal standing to conduct the search. did not have probable cause to search the home. did not have reasonable grounds to connect Boyle to Molotov cocktails or the start of the fire. The Toronto Star refers to "City papers" of citing official documents cited by Winkler. However, Winkler does not admit any of the documents cited refer to information obtained through a search. Winkler also fails to disclose to the Toronto Star the documents cited, except the statement the search was not warranted. Premier Ford on Thursday, March 19, 2016 states the second request to search the home of "a known fire criminal" is being reviewed by Attorney General Yasir Naqvi's office.
