accu-chek smart pix software version v 1.2 download accu-chek smart pix software version v 1.2 download accu-chek smart pix software version v 1.2 downloadThe Sabres haven't had a great season, but at least they're getting a little extra attention for it. March 21, 2013 - Written by Todd Korol The Buffalo Sabres have already suffered one significant setback in the 2013-14 season. And that's been the inability of starters Ryan Miller, Drew Stafford and Tyler Ennis to get hot at the same time. That opening line combo has been reliable for several seasons now, but have you noticed that Buffalo hasn't won more than two games in a row over that span? When you combine that with the news from the Sabres' website that some of their best players have arrived at training camp, the picture isn't pretty. The Sabres haven't won more than two games in a row over the last six years. That's two more losses than the record win percentage (.492) of the previous 36-year stretch. Still, those are the facts, and right now, it's the Sabres who are the also-rans in the NHL. Sabres GM Tim Murray has shown a willingness to make bold decisions. When one of the league's best goaltenders is considered a bust, you'd be hard-pressed to argue that Murray is wrong. In a perfect world, you trade for the guy you were counting on to start your career, and then find another one. But when the player everyone thought you were acquiring isn't good enough, then you can reasonably question the other moves you made. Murray acquired Miller at the 2012 trade deadline, making the big-time goalie into the answer to the question "which year can you finish second?" He put the puck in the net more often than a new mom has naps. But this year, the trade for Miller didn't exactly work out. Facing more than 29 shots per game and a career-worst.908 save percentage,
