The book sucks as well. NO. Not anymore. I found out how to read Japanese after I turned 18, and slowly but surely became an avid reader of manga. I'm just guessing but it seems like the first fandom was born around that time, and you can see now that most of today's fandoms were spawned during the 90s and 00s. As it turns out, the early 90s weren't a great time to exist as a Serious Otaku. Technology wasnt exactly supportive of fandom growth, and the root cause of this (from my understanding) was the fact that only the big companies owned the Nintendo and the Sega at that time, and most small companies couldn't afford these systems. I guess much like the PC (X-box and PS2) where the popularity grew up during the 00s, technology became accessible to more people, and that's what lead to it becoming a widespread mainstream phenomenon. So, for those who were teenagers during this time, you probably see why I'm saying that. On the other hand, the 00s wasn't that great either. What happened was, Japan's economy swelled massively and with Quality assurance (QA) programs evaluate quality of care by examining the charts of patients who underwent procedures, care, or treatments as a group. Many QA programs have now focused on the reliability of aggregated data rather than the accuracy of individual charts. This study determined the reliability of aggregated data in evaluating QA results. The QA program of a multispecialty group practice was evaluated. The charts of patients who were treated by a specialist were reviewed by a physician and compared with a checklist which verified the documentation of the criteria. We determined the sensitivity and specificity of the checklist by calculating the agreement with chart review and the Kappa statistic. One hundred ninety-nine charts were reviewed. In terms of their level of agreement with chart review, sensitivity was 92%, specificity 87%, and Kappa 0.82. This study demonstrates the feasibility of using the QA program of a multispecialty group practice to evaluate the quality of care and to identify areas in which the group practice can improve the quality of care.The owners of an aging former military radar site in Bolingbrook are planning to let a Navy veteran buy the property and turn it into an active-duty recruiting center for the Marine Corps. The Chicago Tribune reports the Navy has had a recruiting station at the radar site for more than 20 years, and it has always been used for the recruiting of Navy personnel. That about to change, says a local realtor. "I think it's really exciting, because the Navy should have a recruiting station right here in Bolingbrook," said Jim Hindelang, a local realtor, who told the bff6bb2d33
