Legendary composer's music, visual art fuel 'To Be a Man: For Women' On a table covered in a red tablecloth, a pile of CDs held up by red magnets and a stack of posters taped to a wall are the keys that will unlock any door to the world of Gilbert and Sullivan. That world is complete: The first woman who will sit in the Gilbert and Sullivan Society's newly formed chair is an accomplished composer and pianist, a former executive director and staff member at the Society who arranges its programs and has written about the history and traditions of the organization. "It's amazing," says Susan Spinner, who learned to play cello at the age of 3 and remains a lifelong fan of the music. "It's wonderful." Spinner, who is one of two women to take the helm of the G&S Society, which holds an annual performance of "H.M.S. Pinafore" and several smaller concerts in recent years, says she is fascinated by the 19th-century works of Gilbert and Sullivan but also has a love for other genre music that has been a significant part of her life for nearly 40 years. She has performed in orchestras and with rock bands in Toronto and elsewhere, and she composed and performed for more than a decade with the music and art club Echoes of the City. "I really am at home in the classical repertoire," Spinner says. "But I'm really gratified by having audiences who really connect with Gilbert and Sullivan."
