What's new:

the spookiest holiday on Curaçao Amsterdam and Barcelona, Amsterdam and Bogota. I like to compare destinations but few of my trips have even gotten to compare in the same sentence, at least not with another. I could have crammed post about all those cool cities, but this article has bitten me like a ton of vampires and I need to share my lousy experiences as soon as possible. The last trip I remember was a 4 star rated Lisbon trip for €400, a value for money-value for money, as there was a lot of downtime but we only saw a few museum and sites, as Lisbon felt like a fair city but it lacked the magic charm of Venice and Florence. It's been a long time, but the lazy days on the beach and beaches make the memories come rushing back. A long time, but I was happy. It's been a long trip, but it was the best holiday ever. But now, it's back to reality. The first stop when we saw the map was Curaçao. Curacao was definitely the spookiest part of the trip. At first I was amazed with the landscape and natural beauty of this place. But it got spookier and spookier the more it hit me. The first step is obviously going to the nightclubs and to taste the latest local electro party, but it happened from the moment we arrived on Curaçao. Zombie Flight: An excuse Whenever we had a day off between the mornings and the nights we went for a flight in the skies, which was always fun. We planned those flights multiple times on our itinerary: - Guadeloupe, on our way to St. Martin - Aruba, on the way to St. Maarten - Jamaica, on our way to Aruba - Barbados, on our way to Saint Thomas - Colombia, on our way to St. Martin - Curaçao, on our way to Anguilla This was one of the coolest party locations with the most stunning sights to see. That's not in St. Martin, which although incredibly beautiful is in the middle of nowhere. Curaçao is just a bar in the sky. No lines, no security, no wait, good food and drinks and drinks. It reminds me of the first night of our old party in Ikea
