Michigan State coach Mark Dantonio is a really good coach. (Mike Mulholland for ESPN) Take what you want from this, if anything, but don't read much into it. It's on that basis that Mark Dantonio's arrival in East Lansing has been parsed to death. The logic behind this is that, yes, Michigan State is having a rough transition period after Brady Hoke's exit, but it's a tough road to hoe and the Spartans have been one of the best teams in the country in recent years.

And, really, why would you not be thinking that? This is no slight on Michigan State, and it's probably a little early to be talking about bowl positioning or Final Four commutations.

Dantonio hasn't even coached a game yet, and he could have the MSU program in the midst of a downturn for all we know. But he's certainly in some sort of contract negotiation limbo, and if any former Big Ten coach can point to a polarizing figure like Hoke or Urban Meyer and genuinely evaluate his buyout with a level head and non-spiteful disposition, it would be Dantonio. Even though a lot of us know better: --Mark

Dantonio is very good at running football teams, well-regarded for running football teams and he is already on the damn coaching staff at Michigan State. This is exactly the kind of situation a guy who is proficient at running football teams ought to understand. It's not a stretch to say that Mark Dantonio might be a really good coach. --Mark Dantonio has won a national championship at Cincinnati. Mark Dantonio has won a national championship at Cincinnati. --Mark Dantonio also has an obvious contract situation to deal with and it's not as if he's going to get another Super Bowl ring if he doesn't start getting a little more savvy on this. --Michigan State's departure from the Big Ten championship game isn't going to be simple for, like, ever. And so he's sitting around, doing what Michigan State coaches do best... staying in the background... not getting involved...

Currently I have something like this: {{email}} When selectEmailAddress is called, my application has an action that grabs the clicked email address and attempts to save it to the URL using: window.location.hash = '{{email}}'; However, when I run the application the URL always ends up being something like this: test@example.com But I expected the URL to be more like: test@example.com How can I generate the URL hash using the value of the email address (i.e. test@example.com)? Thanks! A: I think you might be better off with: window.location.pathname.replace('/', '') Although, as @SteveWood says, this could change if, for example, your URLs have empty id attributes. You might not want to use the id attribute because you don't want that to be the only text in the URL; you might want to use something like a class instead. In that case you could use: window.
