This study was performed to determine the prevalence, extent, and anatomical relationship of the pneumatized structures in the front and retroperitoneal spaces. Of the 1,240 computed tomography (CT) examinations performed in our institution, 699 were done for examining osseous lesions of the body and the cranium and were retrospectively reviewed for the presence of various pneumatized structures. Most of these patients had a regular background; 236 patients had a history of a surgical intervention in the abdomen or retroperitoneal areas. Statistical analyses were performed with the SAS software for Windows and a P value of less than.05 was considered significant. The population was divided into two groups. Group 1 consisted of patients with a history of abdominal or retroperitoneal surgery (n = 129). Group 2 consisted of patients with a regular background (n = 570). The presence or absence of pneumatized structures was noted in both groups. Unilaterally opacified interlobular interpneumatized, intramuscular, intraosseous, or other communicating structures (Eustachian tubules, foramen cecum, foramen lateralis, superior orbital fissure, sphenoparietal sinus, superior sagittal sinus, torcular, and diaphragmatic) were also recorded. The frequency of pneumatized structures was compared between the two groups, as were the prevalence of those structures and 6d1f23a050
