December 20, 2005 My very favorite author of the whole lot is none other than Amy Stewart. She's famous for her A Taste of Honey, some little steamy romance, and my other favorite, The Naturopathic Chef, which is more of a memoir. Her latest book, Vegetarian America, a very quick read, but the best of the bunch, is as unique as her books and reads like a bestseller. I just finished reading it, and its definitely an eye-opener. This one is available on Amazon. Some highlights from the book: "For many Americans, it seems a vegetarian diet was an effective way to meet today's nutritional recommendations" and quote "the number of vegetarians in the United States has increased to nearly twenty percent of the population." A sort of large slice of the pie. I did a quick online search, and the numbers are encouraging for us, vegetarian-singles. "A 1998 Gallup poll found that 30 percent of American women and 24 percent of American men reported eating vegetarian diets. "Vegetarians may have the edge in their health battle: Only about four percent of Americans say they are following a vegan diet." "Vegans, of course, were given something of a bad rap." "Around the turn of the century, the name of the game for a lot of Americans was high protein—often to the exclusion of vegetables and fruit—and the leading brand was "Meat-a-mina." "The Mediterranean diet once again found itself the subject of much controversy. As recently as 2005, prominent nutritionists still told everyone to eat olive oil, a healthy fat, no more than eight ounces a day." Amy, who writes about this in the book, quotes an Iowa State University study and says, "
