What are people doing to prepare for this, and how can they ensure they're ready if it happens? Next week, a billion dollars in stimulus will be spent in Maryland on things like "health care infrastructure and home- and community-based services," and "local and regional economic development" as part of the Coronavirus Aid, Relief, and Economic Security Act. The idea that we will be radically changed by the Coronavirus is absurd. It is, however, worth examining what this pandemic means for the future of the European Union, particularly for Turkey. If the Coronavirus pandemic is any indication, we are all going to be forced to change in ways that we're just not prepared for. And now is the time to start planning for that. All of this is just speculation right now. Most Americans are still convinced that the Coronavirus will be gone in a few weeks. Despite this, there is probably going to be a major economic impact, especially on the health care sector, one of the biggest employers in the United States. Are you aware of the $1.5 Trillion stimulus bill? Who is the recipient of this large, bold legislation? And how did the stimulus package come to be? The European Union is going to be dealing with a Coronavirus Crisis of its own. The International Business Times notes that, "The European Union and its member nations have been preparing for weeks, with the EU's chief health official asking EU nations to prepare for 'a very substantial number of deaths'." In other words, the Coronavirus is already here, and people just aren't aware of that fact. This viral outbreak is already an extremely
