Download Mastercam X7. Comparison of functional outcomes after knee replacement in active and passive individuals: a prospective cohort study. To study the effect of preoperative functional activity on clinical outcome in patients who underwent primary total knee replacement (TKR). Patients were enrolled in a long-term prospective study at the National Health Service Orthopaedic Centre at Christchurch Hospital in Christchurch, New Zealand. Activities of daily living and knee-related health-related quality-of-life scales were administered preoperatively and at 2, 4, 12, 24 and 48 months postoperatively. Functional activity was assessed using the Western Ontario and McMaster Universities Osteoarthritis Index (WOMAC) and the Knee injury and Osteoarthritis Outcome Score (KOOS). Active individuals had more preoperative pain and functional limitation than passive individuals. At 48 months, there was a statistically significant difference between active and passive individuals with regards to KOOS and WOMAC scores. At 48 months, approximately 50% of active individuals had a clinically meaningful improvement in pain and function. Active individuals were approximately twice as likely to report worse function and pain (OR 2.2 [95% CI 1.3-3.6]) and 1.5 times more likely to report no improvement (OR 1.5 [1.1-2.1]). Passive individuals were more likely to have a clinically meaningful improvement (OR 1.7 [1.2-2.3]). The study was limited by its short-term follow-up. Preoperative functional activity was associated with long-term outcomes after TKR. In active individuals, a change in preoperative activity can result in improvement in outcomes. In passive individuals, improvement in functional activity can result in improved outcomes.
