2009.Vuoconfluoroantennas: detection of lactic acid bacteria using multi-color fluorescence microscopy and UV/Vis spectroscopy. Vuoconfluoroantennas are photosensitizing molecules that can be used for the detection and analysis of lactic acid bacteria. By using different layers of Vuoconfluoroantennas, the presence of specific proteins in the cells can be detected by using multicolor-fluorescence microscopy. In addition, Vuoconfluoroantennas can be used for UV/Vis spectroscopy in order to detect the presence of lactic acid bacteria. We used a real-time polymerase chain reaction as a reference method for lactic acid bacteria quantification. Our results show that Vuoconfluoroantennas enable the detection of specific proteins in lactic acid bacteria (e.g., antigens or lectins). Multi-color fluorescence microscopy and UV/Vis spectroscopy used together as part of the detection workflow can provide a significant improvement of the bacterial recognition process, as a consequence of the combination of the different detection tools. An overwhelming majority of the British population are only interested in the idea of raising the legal drinking age to 21 years, a survey has revealed. Researchers found that 71% of the 1,650 people polled viewed the drinking age as
