So, your problem is that you missed the line `X = "Test";` in your C# code. Check the returned values of the LINQ statements `var students = db.Students.ToList();` `var records = db.Records.ToList();` so that you can compare them with their values in your C# code, to be sure that you did actually get the same set of records at the end. So the problem lies in this line: `var keys = students.Select(i => i.Id).ToList();` because `students` is being recycled and so is `i`, as it seems that the LINQ statement starts a new sequence when it is executed. You may want to use this: `var keys = students.Select(s => s.Id).ToList();` to avoid this problem. In addition, you also need to be aware of the fact that in your connection string, you specified a database (remember that you can have multiple databases at the same time) called `dbo.Students`, which means that you will be having problems if you have already defined a table with a name `dbo.Students`. If that is the case, you will probably need to rename your connection string to `dbo.Records` instead of `dbo.Students`. You may also want to validate your connection string, as shown in this article. A: Your code is vulnerable to a SQL injection attack because you are using the `SqlParameter` class to construct your query: `SqlParameter insertIdParam = new SqlParameter("@insertId", SqlDbType.Int) { Value = (int) insertId }; SqlParameter insertTimestampParam = new SqlParameter("@insertTimestamp", SqlDbType.DateTime) { Value = insertTimestamp }; var whereClause = @"WHERE ID = @insertId"; var sql = @"INSERT INTO Records (Name, LastName, TimeStamp) " + @"VALUES (@Name, @LastName, @TimeStamp)"; SqlCommand cmd = new SqlCommand(sql, Connection); cmd.Parameters.Add(insertIdParam); cmd.Parameters.Add(insertTimestampParam); cmd.Parameters.Add(insertTimestampParam 6d1f23a050`
