A: To add to bmk3507's comment, I did get rid of the Generic USB Audio interface after the Mac updated. There's a few things to try: Remove USB Audio Interface. Swap with a different input/mic. Your settings are corrupted somehow, try a reinstall.

The present invention relates to a method of reproducing a clock signal used in a recording/reproducing apparatus and a recording/reproducing apparatus for carrying out the same. In a digital versatile disc (DVD) recorder, a pulse signal has to be reproduced in order to synchronize with data reproducing. Therefore, in the DVD recorder, a clock signal reproduced by a clock reproducing part for reproducing the data recorded on a recording medium is used as a reference clock signal for reproducing data by a data reproducing part. There are various formats for recording and reproducing data on and from a recording medium including the DVD recorder, for example, DVD-RW, DVD-RAM, etc. The DVD-RAM, etc. has a formatting method which is referred to as ATIP (absolute time information (ATAPI command) packet). The ATIP method has a layout format in which an address (PAT area) where the absolute time information is recorded, a recording point for the absolute time information, a generation number of the absolute time information, a generation number for the absolute time information after being recorded and a generation number for a next PAT area are sequentially recorded from a lead-in area in which an area is reserved for displaying a disc. The recording point of the absolute time information is a position at which a generation number for the absolute time information is recorded. Since the generation number for the absolute time information recorded in the PAT area after the absolute time information is recorded is included in the absolute time information itself, a generation number of the absolute time information recorded in the same area is recorded in the absolute time information. The absolute time information includes time information indicating absolute time in hours, minutes and seconds. In the DVD recorder, to reproduce the absolute time information from the recorded absolute time information, a generation number included in the absolute time information after being recorded is compared with a generation number included in the absolute time information itself. The absolute time information is reproduced by using the absolute time information after being compared. In the DVD recorder, in reproduction, if the absolute time information has been recorded in an area other than the PAT area, it is necessary to reproduce the absolute
