A: There is no need to use any regex. Simply strip the string that starts and ends with "&" before splitting the string by "&" and get the first part of the string: >>> s="robots&robots&robots" >>> s.split('&')[0] 'robots' If you just want to get the first item of the string, you can use split() with limit argument: >>> s.split('&', 1)[0] 'robots' A: Using your commented out regex, you're going to want: preg_match('%^robots(?:=&|$)%i', $string, $match); echo $match; Output: robots , and in the broader scheme of things, the lives of members of the working class who have no political consciousness.
