I'm working on a project that requires one EC2 security group to act as a proxy for another group that allows inbound HTTPS traffic from a specific IP range. I have a different security group that blocks access from that IP range that will handle all of the connection switching on the connections we're interested in. I've set up my proxy group with a CloudWatch rule that: Only allows HTTPS traffic coming from an IP address (i.e. https://*.mydomain.com) Allows connections that are part of a specific S3 bucket (s3://my-bucket) I've also set up my blocking group with a CloudWatch rule that: Only allows connections that connect to s3://my-bucket When I log into my EC2 management console, I see two entries for my proxy group: The first entry is for HTTPS requests coming from any IP The second entry is for HTTPS requests coming from the specific IP I want to allow access for My questions are: Will the rule that's blocking connections to my-bucket be triggered if a connection comes in on one of the other security groups? Is there a way to combine the rules so that I can only have one rule for the connection switching? A: Is there a way to combine the rules so that I can only have one rule for the connection switching? In a situation like this where you have a load balancer, CloudFront or another Origin Access Identity, you can then create an Identity-based policy that allows connections from a certain IP range to the Origin Access Identity, and disallow all others. When you have a CloudFront Origin, I believe this is the default behaviour. It is possible to change the rules in the AWS console which also changes your policy. When you have an Origin Access Identity this is not possible, unless you have the permission from the owner of that Identity to change its rules. The Identity-based rule is only applicable to connections made from CloudFront. (Actually this is not quite true.

My Boss Malayalam - 2012 - DVDRip - 400MB - X264

'my boss' is a comedy which has thiyagavel as the leading man. he plays the role of mukundan, a technology journalist, who runs a magazine named boss. taking a situation based on a film industry observer, mukundan creates plans to make his own boss magazine on the lines of the boss. mukundan meets his girlfriend chinnama and reveals his plan to make boss. after some time, mukundan publishes boss and gets to know that chinnama is having an affair with murali, a famous film director. this film is an amalgamation of multiple stories which are told throughout the film. it all starts with this theory that 'boss' is a person who gives us one thought at a time. mukundan considers himself a 'boss' and he is used to getting one thought in a day. one day, the office is about to be shut down, so he tells his secretary to just do the daily duties and the next day they will have a new boss and the staff will just do their jobs. as the story progresses, we see his family members creating havoc in his life. he is in a relationship with chinnama, who is having an affair with another man. so, he leaves chinnama, but goes back because of his love. chinnama talks him into staying for a few days, by promising to reform her ways. she then has a second affair, with the owner of a hotel, who suffers from a leg injury. her character acts very selfish and only takes the payment for the room that she takes, ignoring mukundan. there are a few film sequences which need to be mentioned here. the references that are made to the legendary hollywood action heroes go as follows - there is a sequence in which mukundan goes to a beach and finds a young girl, her face dirtied, of a bandit caste background. he comes back and informs chinnama who in turn asks him about the movie 'the gangsters and the ghost', which of course will mean for the die-hard fans the 1967 john cassavetes film, 'a woman under the influence'. mukundan then narrates the sequence in such a manner that it can actually be a reference to the cassavetes film, as he shouts, aja koothaman kara! audhu! koothambada nikka vayi thappalam purna-kkathu! (mary! did you do it! it's a "no-no!" for you) later on, in another sequence, chinnama narrates the scene as she makes the chocolate for them. another segment that needs mention is the movie row that chinnama has while giving birth. the sequence is about a movie star who has a row with a diva. the diva decides to make a point by giving a speech for half an hour, which of course of course she ends up doing. you will know that the row goes on for another three hours as all three characters talk. 5ec8ef588b
