To determine whether these virtualization solutions qualify as a virtual private cloud, or VPC, you need to know whether they permit a networking team to independently control tenant resources without intervention. The most important requirement for a VPC is that it's "self-service", which means there is no control beyond the software. In addition, VPCs protect security by including comprehensive packet inspection and encryption that permit the owners to view the data in real time without allowing third-party access to private endpoints. VPC is not a service but rather a method of secure networking that provides the QoS and load balancing needs of the Internet Services markets. Using the property of a VPC, appliances can be created to satisfy a variety of networking requirements, from a private network with stringent security requirements to a public network in which user information can be shared. The application layer of IPSec can be considered as the administrative layer because it allows network administrators to monitor, manage, and configure the network. Because IPSec permits network administrators to monitor, manage, and configure network traffic in real time, it is important to apply an IPSec solution that is based on services. This is why IPSec solutions should permit network administrators to monitor and manage IPSec functionality from within the properties of the IPSec solution. For example, in Microsoft's implementation of Transport Layer Security (TLS), the Network Access Provider (NAP), is a separate application that sits on top of TLS and allows network administrators to monitor and manage TLS events from within the properties of the TLS solution.

softperfects network scanner can be scheduled to scan a network on a periodic or on-demand basis. the scheduled scans can be accessed from a server or scheduled from a workstation. softperfects network scanner supports the following scheduling parameters: time interval: specify the amount of time to wait between scans number of scans: how many times to perform the specified scan scan path: specify the path on the host to scan scan settings: specify the scan settings softperfects network scanner also provides the ability to manually perform a scan without the overhead of scheduling a scan. the manual scan is useful for those occasions where the administrator may not be available to set a schedule. the manual scan feature of softperfects network scanner provides the following functionality: scan type: specify the type of scan scan path: specify the path on the host to scan scan settings: specify the scan settings show results: display the scan results on the host softperfects network scanner comes as a single executable which can be run without requiring administrator credentials. after the scan completes, you can optionally view the scan results on the host. alternatively, the results can be exported to a file for later analysis. you can optionally notify the host of the scan, perform the specified action (e.g., reboot, restart, shutdown, hard power-off, etc.) on the host or change the current users groups. finally, the scan can be saved to a file for later use. 5ec8ef588b
