Peter Thiel says Silicon Valley isn't the startup hub it used to be - rohit6223 ====== cortesoft "Silicon Valley" is a nice place to visit, but it is pretty unlikely that you are going to want to move there. It is filled with rich people, and rich people are pretty much not into coding, or startups. If you really want to start a startup in Silicon Valley, go to Stanford or Berkeley. Those are good schools, and there is probably some room there. ~~~ jimktrains2 I don't disagree, I live in Berkeley now but used to be in the Bay Area. One of the biggest problems with the Bay Area is that it's filled with rich people who also aren't into anything startup-y. I can't think of an example of any that I know of 2edc1e01e8

CloseQ: Monkey patching rails plugin classes in nonrails apps I am using an excellent ruby gem in a non-rails app and I need to make some changes to the code. The problem is that the gem loads some rails code and monkey patches rails methods. Is there a way to get the gem to use a different class without having to fork it (or is there some way to monkey patch my class)? A: You can use private_class_method to ensure that the class method is only visible in your module # lib/my_gem/my_module.rb module MyModule private_class_method :do_something def do_something # Do something end
