Shigellosis is one of the common and significant forms of bacterial infection in developing and developed countries. In most of the cases of shigellosis, especially in developing countries, the etiological agent is Shigella sonnei, while Shigella flexneri is the main cause of infections in developed countries. In addition to causing a form of diarrhea, shigellosis is also associated with dysentery. The major virulence factor of S. flexneri is the capsular polysaccharide and the main determinant of O-antigen is the O-chain. The cytotoxic enterotoxin 1 of S. flexneri elicits the shigellosis and is thus an effective protective antigen. The recent developments in molecular characterization of this bacillus have allowed the more accurate typing of the species.Ambient gas concentration analyzers have been known for some time for use in chemical, environmental, and industrial analyses. A very basic ambient gas concentration analyzer can be constructed as a battery-operated, hand-held, flow-through, pressurized aerosol sampler. A simple aerosol sampler may consist of a reaction chamber having a semi-permeable barrier or membrane and an inlet in the top of the chamber. A battery-
