It says something like "Ubuntu is running in low-graphics mode" and doesn't work for a few hours. But it boots with recovery mode and I can login there just fine. How can I find out what is wrong with my system such that it won't boot normally? EDIT: I tried the login from recovery mode, but the screen flickers as if my computer was turned off while I was rebooting. It doesn't work that way. It will take a few hours to finish booting. A: This is the usual reason that your system boots into recovery mode. Usually when your system tries to boot it hangs at some point in booting. You can move ahead as recovery works just like normal mode i.e. you can take action using the keyboard and mouse. Sometimes we get stuck in recovery mode. It is when you have any unbootable partitions or lost partition table. in case your system is not hanging on some point during booting but it doesn't boot normally and just show black screen then there are couple of things which you can check: Check your wifi status: There is a chance that there is some kind of issue with your wifi. I would suggest you to take help from your wifi router user manual. Use it's manual. Check your USB keyboard: If you have a USB keyboard and even though you are using it properly it does not work then it may
