The most beloved, yet down right loudest book I've ever read, and I say that for a good reason... This book is the most down to earth book I've ever read, even when comparing to "The Vampire Diaries", "Twilight" and such. Everything from the author's style of writing, the characters, the plot, the general, it was absolutely beautifully put together. And here's the reason why I love it so much... In the beginning of the book, it tells you that the main character was transferred to a new school, where he meets a new class and every single other student he meets. But, the principal of the school has no more luck than he did, and as soon as the school closes and the kids graduate, his parents take him home to Spain where he has lived all his life. The main character is the epitome of pure innocence, and every single character in the book reminds you of someone who you know, or knew, or yourself. It's so realistic
