Photoshop team is privileged to announce a new chapter taking you to the core of the latest breakthroughs in image editing with an exciting announcement for Illustrator, InDesign, Photoshop and Photoshop CS6 and newer. The announcement is that we have refreshed Photoshop's capacity to work with the new native app APIs introduced in the last year. We're upgrading new features in locations like the file system, brush collection and service layers, image preview and market place. The new native APIs support additional production workflows creating a seamless workflow between native and native plug-ins. You'll take full advantage of creating, editing and outputting images in the new native applications from native image tools and Photoshop, just as if you were editing in Photoshop. For example, you can create a version of an image in Photoshop and put that version on a web page. The native version of Photoshop can change size or do some color calibration or fine tuning and then you apply the changes directly to the web page from Photoshop.
