The invention relates to a pipe position monitoring apparatus, in particular a pipe position monitoring apparatus for a transmission line, which has at least one current conductor through which a current is supplied to the transmission line, whereby at least one first electronic circuit comprising a phase lock loop (PLL) and a second electronic circuit comprising a control circuit for regulating the angle of the transmission line relative to a current conductor are provided for the purpose of regulating the angle of the transmission line, whereby a further electronic circuit for forming an evaluation signal of the angle is provided in the apparatus. It is known for connecting transmission lines or pipe lines to be provided with radio receivers and/or transmitters to monitor the position of the transmission line, and these arrangements for position monitoring of pipe lines normally comprise current pick-ups or plugs, which enable the current supply to the transmission line to be monitored. At least one further electronic circuit is connected to the current pick-ups or plugs, and the current flowing through the line is measured by the electronic circuit and converted into measurement signals, which are sent to a central evaluation circuit. The evaluation circuit converts the measurement signals into a digital evaluation signal, which indicates the angle of the transmission line relative to the current conductor. When the pipe line is installed, the measurement signals should be evaluated at the same position as the pipe line is to be installed, the radio receiver and/or transmitter, which are normally produced by the manufacturer, are not sufficiently accurate for this purpose. In particular, the measurement signals are often inaccurate at the beginning of the installation, whereby the installation is expensive and/or complex. According to the invention, this disadvantage is eliminated by providing a pipe position monitoring apparatus having at least one current conductor through which a current is supplied to the transmission line,
