Google's next strategy on Chrome The company has started testing a new feature, code-named "chrome://flags/#enable-background-tab-loading", to make more tabs open in the background (and then eliminate the need to allow extensions to do so). "This change allows developers to explore the front-end of a new tab loading strategy they are interested in testing," Google said in a blogpost today. "We will announce this feature and find an extension to showcase it at Google I/O." Google plans to start testing the feature "in the coming weeks", but it's not clear whether it will make it into Chrome v23, an upcoming release of the browser. In the meantime, Google has published an extension that makes it easier to add more tabs to Chrome's background tabs. 5-Aminoimidazole-4-carboxamide ribonucleoside effects on human mast cells and monocytes.
